this collection looks back at the drawings and paintings done over a lifetime it began with a hunger to create by drawing when i was around twelve years old this book represents a chance to put them altogether into a whole that may make more sense from the start i have used drawing and painting as a way of calming down concentrating and focusing on settling things around me by calling them artwork i could make them look as i wanted them to remain i thought they should speak with my voice and say what i wanted to say it came natural to me because that was what i wanted it was just that simple i still see things that way there is the passing and there is the fixed it seems like there was a basic need to draw paint and express what was inside i could organize and put things together on paper or canvas that went together in no other way at no other time it was a way out of myself and i took it at times it was the best way to do things when was no other way i was first inspired by a glossy photo journal of the early sixties with photographs of caroline kennedy on top of a horse they went together and it all made sense her father was highly esteemed but was later shot while riding a convertible in dallas but caroline lives it makes for a sad story but that is the way that many stories go one lives and learns when i later tried to ride a horse in imitation it ran to the middle of an interstate expressway and stopped in its tracks i loved horses until i learned they were not all without fault i found they had a will of their own that was often greater than that of the rider regardless they were often better on paper than in real life i started drawing with a pencil and charcoal but later graduated to oils paints acrylics pastels and finally watercolours i saved the best for last
